Jobless aid requests fall to 3-week low

The number of Americans seeking unemployment benefits fell by 27,000 last week, an indication that hiring could improve.

The Labor Department said Thursday that weekly applications dropped to a seasonally adjusted 341,000, the lowest level in three weeks.

Applications are a proxy for layoffs. As they fall, net hiring typically rises.