

New home sales turn around

Sales of new U.S. homes rose in September after four straight monthly declines, largely because builders cut their prices. The Commerce Department said Wednesday sales rose 5.7 percent to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 313,000 homes. Still, that's less than half the 700,000 economists say must be sold to sustain a healthy housing market. GENE J. PUSKAS/AP