SC Botanical Garden prepares for Heritage Festival October 29

CLEMSON — The South Carolina Botanical Garden is hosting the Heritage Festival on Saturday October 29 from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. The Heritage Festival is a family-oriented celebration of the nature, arts, and culture of South Carolina.

Participation in the Heritage Festival is vital to achieving the Garden's mission to serve as an interdisciplinary resource focusing on teaching, research, and outreach.

As a partner in education, your participation in the festival will unite the Clemson community through our common goals of celebrating of the arts, culture, history, and community spirit. The 2011 Heritage Festival will feature a day filled with; Garden tours, educational classes, and lectures, Hands-on children's activities, Art, crafts, music, and storytellers and trick-or-treating & costume contest

The South Carolina Botanical Garden would like to ask for your participation in this celebration of nature, arts, and culture. Please contact scbg@clemson.edu.

edu for more information. The festival mission includes three goals:

- to educate the community about the cultural, historical, and natural heritage of South Carolina through performances and demonstrations of arts, educational talks, tours, and hands-on learning opportunities;
- to inspire the community to learn more about South Carolina's diverse cultural heritage through hands-on exposure to the arts, learning experiences, and performances;
- to foster cooperation and collaboration among town committees, organizations, businesses, and residents in an effort to educate and strengthen our community and its commitment to the value of nature, culture, and the arts.

The Heritage Festival is one of several programs that reflect the Garden's commitment to sharing nature and culture with the community.
