Crews survey property damage Monday in the Crewview community of Seneca. Much of the Upstate was drenched with an inch or more of rain during a Sunday thunderstorm that damaged some property and toppled some trees and large branches. Terry Benthall of the National Weather Service in Greenville said Westminster, Seneca, and a small area north of Walhalla saw some damage from high winds and heavy rain. Most locations in Oconee County received about an inch of rain, while the system's power tapered off as it traveled eastward, Benthall said.
