THURSDAY, JULY 19, 2012

The Who coming to Greenville

NEW YORK (AP) — The Who's Roger Daltrey and Pete Townshend are taking "Quadrophenia" and other Who classics on the road for a U.S. tour this fall, but first plan what Daltrey calls a great finale for the Olympic Games in London.

"We have recorded a piece of music that is a fabulous ending for the Olympics ... and just shows the great music that has come out of this country. This country has put some fabulous music out into the world," Daltrey said Wednesday.

The Who's Olympic performance will be a tuneup of sorts for their American tour, which kicks off Nov. 1 in Sunrise, Fla., and will end in Providence, R.I., on Feb. 26.

The Who will be in Greenville, S.C., on Nov. 8 at the Bi-Lo Center. Tickets are $39.50 to $129.50 and will go on sale to the general public on July 27 at 10 a.m. The show starts at 7:30 p.m., with the doors opening at 6:30 p.m.

It will be the first concert by The Who in South Carolina.

The Journal contributed to this report.