Trampoline park to bounce into the Upstate

By Angelia Davis
Staff writer
davisal@greenvilleonline.com

A California company is about to give residents here something to jump into.

Gravitopia plans to open a 27,000-square-foot trampoline park at 48 Brookfield Oaks Drive in Greenville. It will open this summer, becoming the first extreme trampoline park in South Carolina, the company said.

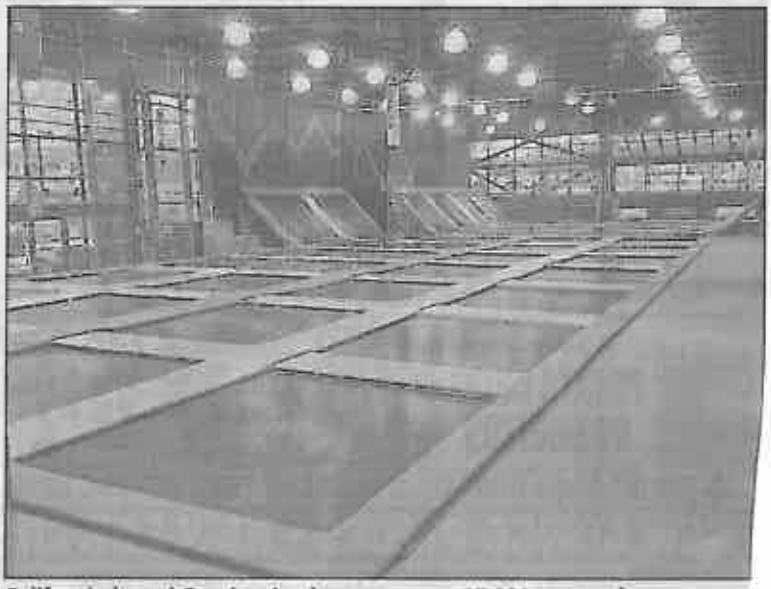

Gravitopia will offer more than 10,000 square feet of trampolines, an aerial ninja obstacle coures, trampoline dodge ball, olympic foam pits, trampoline aerobics and a site for birthday parties, the company said.

Case Lawrence, the company's owner and developer, has parks in Fresno, Calif.; Albuquerque, N.M.; Birmingham, Ala.; Richmond, Va.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Tulsa, Okla.; and Virginia Beach, Va.

He said Greenville is "the ideal city for our next park. It has strong demographics of youth and young adults and has an active recreational culture. We found a truly unique building for this concept."

Gravitopia will offer something for all ages, the company said.

Customers pay for jumping time "per hour" with pricing between $8 and $12 per hour. In addition to birthday parties, Gravitopia will also host dodge ball tournaments, trampoline aerobics classes, and special weekend club nights with laser lighting and live DJ music.

California-based Gravitopia plans to open a 27,000-square-foot trampoline park in Greenville this summer. PROVIDED