'UNLIKE ANY OTHER'

Clemson unveils Core Campus Project dorms

BY ERIC SPROTT
THE JOURNAL

CLEMSON — As a small handful of students started making their way into their homes away from home Thursday morning on the Clemson University campus, the first residents of the school's newest dorms had to make sure to watch out for wet paint.

But minor inconveniences aside, there's not much to complain about for those making their way into the dorms at the Clemson Core Campus Project, an 18-month project with a $96 million price tag that's giving close to 700 students the best accommodations the school has ever offered.

"This project has been time and effort and love actively for the last five years, but in concept for more than 10 years," said Kathy Hobgood, Clemson's executive director of housing and dining. "The fact

SEE PROJECT, PAGE A5

Above: Many of the lounge areas at the Clemson Core Campus Project, an 18-month, $96 million project that will house close to 700 students, feature views overlooking Memorial Stadium. Left: Pictured is Building C at the Clemson Core Campus Project, which along with Building D will house the Calhoun Honors College. Building A is for traditional freshman housing, while Building B is the school's new, soon-to-be-completed dining hall.

PHOTOS BY REX BROWN | THE JOURNAL